

“Company Lawyers: Independent By Design” is the first international and comparative work ever published on the important topic of the independence of the company lawyers profession. At the European level and sometime at the local level, the independence of company lawyers is denied. This denial is problematic in many respects and especially for the company lawyer’s client: the company. This White Paper explains what the concept of such independence is and why the recognition of such a characteristic is the cornerstone of the legal department and the company where the legal department operates.

The ECLA White Paper “Company Lawyers: Independent By Design” contributors includes nearly 60 renowned and internationally prominent legal signatures (company lawyers, law professors, heads of professional associations and outside counsels) originating from more than 20 countries across 4 continents (by order of appearance in this White Paper):
